

2026 Women's History Month Presents

Feminist Praxis as Liberation Pedagogy: Women of Color Educators with Diverse Identities Navigating Higher Education

Monday, March 30 | 11 a.m.- 1 p.m.
LC 155

Presented by Sarra BenGhorbal, Cerritos College
Prof. Caroline Romero, Cerritos College

In this historical moment we all live in, what does it mean to teach toward liberation? This panel gathers early-career professors of color working across Ethnic Studies, Gender and Sexuality Studies, and critical interdisciplinary spaces to explore teaching as a radical and relational praxis, one that holds love, joy, and resistance at its core.

This panel offers a space for vulnerability, reflection, and collective truth-telling. Together, we will examine the emotional and political labor of teaching in the margins, while sharing practices rooted in abolition, healing, resistance, and hope. Through this dialogue, we reclaim teaching as a radical act: not just of survival, but of dreaming and building otherwise.

Panel Speakers Include:

Prof. Caroline Romero, Cerritos College.
Prof. Ariana Flores, Pasadena City College),
Prof. Yadia Ceballos-Tellechea, LACCD. and
Sarra BenGhorbal, Cerritos College
